

2021 Medical Assisting Educator Compensation and Benefits Report

Of survey respondents who identified primarily as medical assisting educators, about 90% of medical assisting educators surveyed work full time, with the other 10% teaching part time. The majority (89%) of full-time educators receive their compensation in the form of an annual salary, while around 11% are paid hourly.

Compensation

On average, full-time medical assisting educators reported earning an annual gross salary of $56,431, with nearly 36% reporting that they earn at least $65,000 annually and 16% reporting more than $75,000 in annual earnings. The breakdown of educators' salaries by years of experience is shown in Table 5.

Employment benefits

Insurance

Nearly 86% of full-time educators receive major medical coverage and 84% receive dental insurance. Discount prescription coverage, accidental death, disability, basic hospitalization, and vision were over 50% rates. Rates of coverage for full-time educators are listed in Figure 5.

AAMA membership and conference

When asked if employers offer to help pay for various AAMA expenses, 43% of full-time educators who are AAMA members reported full payment of membership dues, with 48% reporting full payment of conference registration fees. Roughly 43% reported full payment of travel and lodging for conference (Figure 6).

Table 5. Average full-time educator salary by years of experience ($)

Experience	Salary
0–2 years	51,028
3–5 years	57,295
6–9 years	51,810
10–15 years	55,443
16+ years	60,927
Overall	56,431

Figure 5. Insurance benefits received by full-time educators

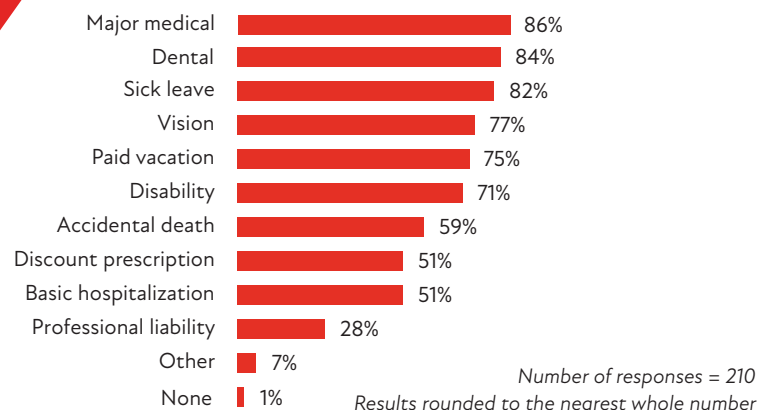

Figure 6. Dues assistance received by full-time educators

