

2023 Medical Assisting Educator Compensation and Benefits Report

Of survey respondents who identified primarily as medical assisting educators, about 87% of medical assisting educators surveyed work full time, with the other 13% teaching part time. The majority (62%) of full-time educators receive their compensation in the form of an annual salary, while around 38% are paid hourly.

Compensation

On average, full-time medical assisting educators reported earning an annual gross salary of $49,769, with over 32% reporting that they earn at least $65,000 annually and nearly 14% reporting more than $75,000 in annual earnings. The breakdown of educators' salaries by years of experience is shown in Table 5.

Employment Benefits

Insurance

About 66% of full-time educators receive major medical coverage, and 57% receive dental insurance. Accidental death, disability, and vision were over 50% rates. Rates of coverage for full-time educators are listed in Figure 5.

AAMA Membership and Conference

When asked whether employers offer to help pay for various AAMA expenses, 47% of full-time educators who are AAMA members reported full payment of membership dues, with 41% reporting full payment of conference registration fees. Roughly 44% reported full payment of travel and lodging for the AAMA Annual Conference (Figure 6).

Table 5. Average full-time educator salary by years of experience ($)

Experience	Salary
0–2 years	32,867
3–5 years	41,651
6–9 years	49,773
10–15 years	59,630
16+ years	63,565
Overall	49,769

Figure 5. Insurance benefits received by full-time educators

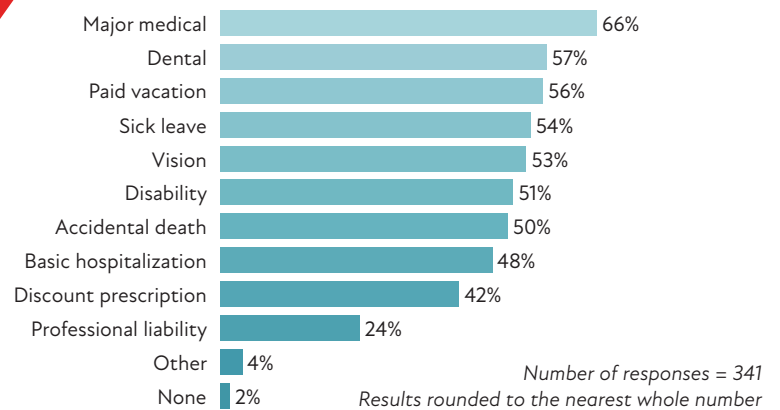

Figure 6. Dues assistance received by full-time educators

